5. Bruce Lee's first student from Seattle Jesse Glover working with seminar participants on punching.
6. L. A. Chinatown student Jerry Poteet.
7. Steve Golden demonstrating his trapping hands skills.
8. The iron man of JKD, Richard Bustillo.
9. Ted Wong lecturing on his private training experiences with Bruce Lee.

Dan Lee is without doubt another jewel in the JKD family crown. He is a past boxing Champion from Shanghai, Bruce Lee's closest private student and a Tai Chi Chuan expert who teaches in the United States. He based all his JKD lessons on the philosophy of Yin-Yang and the students learnt many interesting things about counter-attack, energy exercises and how to use your mind during a fight.

Apart from the exhausting training sessions, the BLEF participants also had the possibility of attending a series of small exhibitions the purpose of which was to inform them about the art and life of the little dragon. In the hotel lobby, the British representative of BLEF, Andrew Staton, presented a series of magazines, informative brochures and a video which contained interviews with stars and VIPs such as James Coburn, Russell Clawthorne, Robert Lee, Gene Le Bell and many others discussing the art and life of Bruce Lee.

Without any doubt, the most important moment for Bruce Lee's fans was the presentation of film archives about the Little Dragon, which up to now had not been available to the public. Completely restored scenes and dialogues from his last work entitled: "The Game of Death" were projected in the Conference Hall. It was more than half an hour of Bruce Lee in action once again, and the participants saw a totally different image in the well-known fight scenes with Dan Inosanto, Chin Hon Joi and Kareem Abdul Jabbar. These new scenes contained dialogue, humor and philosophy
